Clinicians involved with rehabilitation need to provide patients/clients with practical self-guided lifestyle oriented pain management strategies and look beyond the clinic interventions. This course is needed because the National Institutes of Health division National Center for Complementary and Integrative Health (<https://nccih.nih.gov>) 2017 budget is noted to be $130.5 million in order to “determine what is promising, what helps and why, what doesn’t work, and what is safe.” Smithsonian.com indicates that alternative medicine is a 34 billion dollar industry. A perspective in the New England Journal of Medicine states that “in 2016 more than 11 million Americans misused prescription opioids, and opioid-related deaths have more than quadrupled since 1999 (Blendon et al. 2018).” Clinicians need to be knowledgeable about integrative health for either direct use in the clinic or for establishing a good rapport and therapeutic alliance with the patient/client through techniques such as motivational interviewing.

This interactive workshop will provide clinician’s practical intervention strategies that may be used as an adjunct to standard practice or establish safe and effective home programs for chronic pain. Participants will learn about meditation, mindfulness, aromatherapy, self-hypnosis, self-massage, yoga, Pilates, tai chi, qigong, Feldenkrais Method, and the Alexander Technique through hand-on experiences, interactive presentation and case studies.

Learning Objectives

1. Explain the biopsychosocial model of pain.
2. Define the role of central sensitization versus peripheral sensitization for pain.
3. Interpret the opioid-abuse epidemic and examine alternate strategies
4. Recognize that certain lifestyle factors may be the source of pain.
5. Examine tools and assessment strategies for pain.
6. Utilize evidence-based practices in integrative and complementary health for intervention strategies.
7. Apply evidence-based strategies to encourage patients to makes lifestyle changes using mind body medicine strategies for pain and disease management and prevention.
